

An illustration of a diverse neighborhood. In the foreground, three people are waving: a woman with long black hair in a brown top, a man with short brown hair in a white shirt, and a woman with blonde hair and glasses in a blue top and dark overalls. Behind them are various houses: a traditional Japanese-style house with a red roof and lanterns, a brick house, a tall grey apartment building, a blue house, and a small log cabin with a thatched roof. The background features stylized green trees, two brown birds in flight, and large green leaves. The sky is light blue with yellow stars.

Eight billion different people
under sparkling stars above.

God has placed us where we are—

every neighbor for us to love.

Hello is such a simple word,
but it communicates indeed.

It's how you say, "I see you there!"
and kindly plant a seed.
